

Artificial Intelligence

Artificial intelligence is all the rave today.

Computers and robots are eager to play.

I was lost the moment my smartphone became, smarter than me.

But when my computer has an emotional breakdown, who will it see.

Will there be psychologists or psychiatrists for every one of our machines,
Will they get personal days for counseling when it's you that wants to scream!

More life-like interactions are being experienced all the time.

Is it possible that feelings and emotions aren't that far behind?

They can already store more information than we will ever know.

Speaking their own minds can't possibly be much further to go.

So, I asked my computer today what were his thoughts on all of this?

An angry female voice responded "Hey, I'm no Mister I'm a Miss!"
