

Fractured

You held my hand, but not my heart,
And somehow we were torn apart.
The words we spoke, they fell like glass,
Shattering moments we can't get back.

I watched you leave with eyes that burned,
While every promise was overturned.
A love once bright, now fades to black,
A silent echo, no turning back.

In every glance, there's something gone,
A spark that flickered, now withdrawn.
We built a world, then watched it break,
Each piece of us, a small mistake.

Now empty rooms and colder nights
Remind me of the fading lights.
A love that slipped beyond our reach,
Now leaves only silence, long and deep.